

Káakulu

Common Raven | Northern Sierra Miwok

Káakulu look a lot like áawici (American crows), but they are bigger, have heavier bills, and have diamond-shaped tails. Áawici are smaller, have thinner bills, and have square or rounded tails. You can see the difference in their tails when they fly overhead.

They also sound different. Can you guess how they sound from the first syllable of their Miwok names?
