The environmental department aims to protect and preserve the environment for future generations through protection, and restoration of our natural resources, lands, waters, and wildlife on tribal lands and within surrounding areas.

We run a tribal native plant nursery which allows our communities to cultivate and preserve native plants that are culturally significant and vital to us and our ecosystems.

These native plants not only serve as food, and medicine, but for habitat restoration and education as well which helps connects our current generations to our ancestral knowledge and practices while preserving the environment for future generations.

It is our goal to clean and save seed from locally adapted native plants and then grow them for the tribal community and restoration projects.
